SchoolTube.com Launches Safe Video and Picture Sharing Site

August 6, 2008 - St. Louis, MO — SchoolTube.com, a safe video sharing website for K-12 students, has released its latest version which includes a cutting edge video player, user friendly features and for the first time, picture sharing. The site showcases media from every facet of student life, uploaded by students and teachers. All of the improvements introduced in the August 6th launch are directly based on feedback from the thousands of members who joined SchoolTube.com during its inaugural year.

SchoolTube.com's community offers free registration and unlimited uploading of classroom related or "just for fun" media. The platform allows students to upload their content to a holding area that keeps the video or picture inactive. Once the material has been reviewed and approved by a registered teacher, it is published for viewing. This process is what makes SchoolTube.com unique.

"We have worked extremely hard to establish SchoolTube.com as the safest environment to share video, now we are adding pictures into the mix. Teachers and parents can finally, safely send their kids online to learn and collaborate with their peers," says Founder Carl Arizpe. Unlike its counterparts, which are blocked by the majority of schools' firewalls, SchoolTube.com has been endorsed by educational associations because of its safety standards.

Many teachers already use the site and praise its values. Don Goble, a teacher from Ladue Horton Watkins High School says, "I truly appreciate the opportunities that SchoolTube has allowed my video students at Ladue. It's the real deal, and a fabulous resource for our students' educational experience." Goble and his students use the platform to broadcast their weekly productions, as well as compare their work with students across the nation.

Students and teachers in all academic areas have found ways to showcase their work and creativity through video on SchoolTube.com. For more information and to view and upload videos, visit www.schooltube.com.
